

The President's 2015 Budget at a Glance: Discretionary Spending

March 2014

Recently, President Obama released his fiscal year (FY) 2015 budget, reflecting his administration's spending priorities for the coming year. This fact sheet analyzes how children fare in the discretionary portion of the budget proposal, highlighting notable increases, cuts, and new initiatives.

As compared to FY 2014, the president's budget increases overall discretionary spending on kids by $2.2 billion, or by less than 1 percent after adjusting for inflation. However, reflecting the new spending caps from 2014's Bipartisan Budget Act, this budget still leaves discretionary investments for children nearly $600 million below 2012 pre-sequester levels. President Obama's proposed *Opportunity Growth, and Security Initiative*¹ will go a long way to restore these funding cuts, but it is up to Congress to act to change those caps. Our children's futures are too valuable to waste.

Note: Totals reflect First Focus calculations on the share of spending in each program that goes to kids. 2012 was the last full fiscal year before sequestration cuts took effect.
